

In this issue of the Annals of Family Medicine

Internet-Based Vestibular Rehabilitation for Chronic Dizziness 209

Internet-based vestibular rehabilitation can improve dizziness and reduce related disability in older primary care patients.

Information Technology for Patients' Routine Decisions 217

In real-world practice, there are significant challenges in adopting health information technology to assist patients' decision making.

Primary Care Video Visits 225

Televisits with established primary care clinicians are often acceptable to patients and preferred over in-person office visits.

How Canadian Primary Care Aligns With the Medical Home 230

In Canada, national achievement of patient medical home standards remains low, with variations among provinces.

Primary Care in China 237

China's primary health care system includes diverse systems and staffing, with low rates of use.

Premature Death in Patients With History of Self-Harm 246

Young and middle-aged patients who have attempted suicide are at increased risk of premature death by natural and unnatural causes.

A Primary Care Hepatitis C Treatment Program 258

An innovative multidisciplinary program addresses social determinants of health to facilitate engagement in hepatitis C treatment.

Gaps in Merit-Based Incentive Payment System Measures 255

Merit-based incentive payment system measures risk worsening disparities.

Interventions to Prevent Depression in Primary Care 262

Psychological and/or educational interventions to prevent depression have a modest preventive effect in primary care.

Finding Hope in the Face-to-Face 272

A physician and a philosopher explore what it means to look into the face of a patient.