

In this issue of the Annals of Family Medicine

Estimating Residency Needs by 2035 107

To eliminate projected shortages of primary care physicians in 2035, primary care residency production needs to increase by 21%.

Timeliness of Outpatient Follow-up 115

Early follow-up after hospital discharge is associated with meaningfully lower readmission rates only for high risk patients.

Continuity of Care and Hospital Use for Seniors 123

In an integrated delivery system, continuity of care with primary care and specialist clinicians is independently associated with decreased risk of emergency room visits or hospitalizations.

Health Coaching by Medical Assistants 130

Medical assistants acting as health coaches improve clinical indicators of chronic disease control, but effects are not consistent across risk factors and clinic sites.

Social Network Effects on Cardiovascular Disease 139

Quality of practice staff interactions are related to acute care utilization measures in cardiovascular patients.

Long-Term Effect of Population Screening For Diabetes 149

Screening high risk individuals for diabetes is not associated with significant reduction in self-reported cardiovascular morbidity or positive changes in self-reported health behaviors.

Predictors of Chronic Abdominal Pain in Children 158

More than 1 in 3 children coming to family practice with abdominal pain have persistent pain affecting quality of life after 1 year.

Multimorbidity, Income, and Hospital Admissions 164

Increased multimorbidity is related to substantially higher admissions in 3 different health care systems.

A Mixed Methods Approach for Evaluating PCMH 168

A flexible evaluation tool using mixed methods examines how and why patient-centered medical home transformation occurs in different practice settings.

Why Medical Schools Are Tolerant of Unethical Behavior 176

Medical schools tolerate unprofessional and unethical faculty behavior because of institutional organization and culture.

You Can't Hide the Bridges 181

After witnessing a suicide, a resident struggles to integrate the experience into her life and practice.