

In this issue of the Annals of Family Medicine

Effects of PCMH Funding Models 404

Existing financial incentives for practices to adopt patient-centered medical home services may not sufficiently offset the costs of practice transformation.

Drug Adherence vs Drug Importance 415

There is discordance between patients and physicians about the importance of, and adherence to, long-term medications.

Probiotics to Reduce Antibiotic Prescriptions 422

Recommending oral probiotics to asthma patients does not reduce their use of antibiotics during the winter.

Patient Experience with Naloxone 431

Naloxone appears to be acceptable to safety-net patients prescribed long-term opioids.

Fecal Calprotectin for IBD 437

A simple fecal test can rule out inflammatory bowel disease in children with chronic gastrointestinal symptoms.

Hostility During Training 446

Cultural and structural factors in medical training, which create hostility towards primary care, have deep historical roots.

Nifedipine for Chronic Chilblains 453

Nifedipine is not superior to placebo in treating chronic chilblains.

Psychological Interventions for Postnatal Depression 463

Psychotherapy in primary care and home settings reduces symptoms of postpartum depression.

FP Support of the Family With a Mentally Ill Member 460

Family doctors can play an important role in caring for families of mentally ill patients.

Bipolar Disorder: A Daughter's Experience 473

A daughter experiences anger, guilt, and love as she copes with her father's bipolar disorder.

Hope 475

A family physician reflects on her role in treating a patient whose family has experienced mental illness.