

In this issue of the Annals of Family Medicine

Burnout and Scope of Practice in New Family Physicians 200

Among early career family physicians, broader scope of practice is associated with lower risk of burnout.

Adding Visual Association Test to Mini-Mental Status Examination for Dementia 206

In people with a minor decline on the Mini-Mental Status Examination, a simple visual screening test can help distinguish those at increased risk for dementia.

An Updated Analysis of Television Ads for Prescription Drugs 211

Direct-to-consumer advertising continues to emphasize positive promotion of drugs rather than consumer education.

Association of Social Determinants of Health and Quality of Primary Care 217

Health care utilization and receipt of primary care services vary by number of patient social complexities.

Care Transitions From the Patient and Caregiver Perspective 225

During care transitions, patients and caregivers desire clear accountability, continuity, and caring attitudes.

Case Management for Frequent Users of Health Care Services 232

For frequent users of health care services with chronic and complex care needs, case management reduced psychological distress but had no effect on patient activation.

Roles and Functions of Community Health Workers in Primary Care 240

Community health workers in primary care have roles in clinical services, community resource connections, and health education/coaching.

Free Children's Visits and General Practice Attendance 246

Making general practice services available free of charge increases utilization and requires careful workforce planning.

Nurse Practitioner-Physician Comanagement: A Theoretical Model 250

Comanagement of patients by NPs and physicians could reduce primary care workload and improve quality and access.

Centralized Infrastructure for Medical Education Research 257

A centralized infrastructure using omnibus survey methods can facilitate research across multiple institutions.

White Privilege in a White Coat: How Racism Shaped my Medical Education 261

A physician reflects on the ways in which white racial privilege influenced his medical training.

The Mid-Career Demon 264

Through a deeper understanding of hope, a physician begins to overcome acedia, "the desert experience for mind and soul."

Physician Burnout: Resilience Training is Only Part of the Solution 267

Organizational causes of burnout should be treated as quality/safety problems, not issues of physician resilience.