

In this issue of the Annals of Family Medicine

Trust and Relationships at the Heart of Care 482

Blogger Kenny Lin discusses how trust and relationships remain at the heart of primary care.

Use of Annual Wellness Visit After ACA 484

Annual wellness visits increased between 2008-2016 for all people with disabilities.

Primary Care Suicide Risk Screening 492

An item from a screening tool significantly improves the accuracy of identifying suicide attempts.

Building Quality Improvement Capacity 499

Using practice facilitators can improve performance on clinical quality measures.

Assisting Patients With Social Needs 507

Case management-style approaches in primary care settings can improve patients' social conditions.

Emotional Communication and Visit Length 515

Providing space for patients to talk about their emotions in the HIV ambulatory care setting is not shown to save time, but may be important for other reasons.

Organizational Trust 521

Trust is high among clinicians and patients when organizational culture favors quality, communication, cohesion, and values.

Recovering Routine Vaccination Rates 527

Policy and programmatic efforts can be implemented at the local and national level to improve routine vaccination rates.

Peer Coaching for Diabetes Self-Management 532

Certain peer coach communication strategies are associated with higher engagement in a diabetes self-management intervention.

Case Study With a Participatory Approach 540

Twelve steps for designing and conducting a case study with a participatory approach may help guide researchers in the implementation analysis of complex health care innovations.

Primary Care in 35 Countries 547

This paper examines the psychometric properties and scores of the Person-Centered Primary Care Measure in 35 countries.

The Long Reach of Continuity 553

Continuity of care means more than a measurement of serial encounters; it's the source of the most lasting rewards in family medicine.

Parenting My Transgender Child 556

The author shares a personal story of how physicians in particular can support families with gender-creative children.

Diagnosis and Community Among Early Career Clinicians 560

Busy, early-career primary care clinicians can improve patient care, social connectivity, and diagnostic acumen through an institutionally supported case conference.

Suboxone Treatment in a Rural Community 561

A residency program engaged the community to implement an addiction service project.

Mobile COVID-19 Unit and Homelessness 562

A community paramedic team created a mobile COVID-19 unit for people experiencing homelessness.

Opioid Review Board in Primary Care 563

An interprofessional opioid review board within an internal medicine clinic decreases high-risk opioid prescribing, increases the use of sublingual buprenorphine, and contributes to a culture of safe opioid prescribing.