

Digital Imperative

Why the AAFP's push now?

Why not now is the better question. It's common knowledge that the health care community lags behind just about every other industry—even fast food restaurants and video rental stores—when it comes to implementing digital technology.

Concerns about patient safety, quality of care, office efficiency, and the rising cost of health care demonstrate the need for a better system of doing business.

The EHR products the AAFP and its partners are offering will help ensure that patients receive the most timely, appropriate, and efficient medical care possible, said AAFP President Michael Fleming, MD, of Shreveport, La, at the news conference.

An EHR can be the central nervous system of the family medicine office. EHR systems enable physicians to gather and integrate patient information, medical resources, and patient-education resources. Physicians can oversee patients' information and the necessary releases to other health care entities. An EHR can help physicians reduce medical errors and duplication of services.

Given these benefits, the AAFP decided it was time to quit talking and start moving.

The Academy will continue its search for companies to join the effort, thereby offering even broader product options to members. With luck, other medical specialties will follow the Academy's lead, and the entire health care industry will benefit.

"These actions place us clearly in the forefront of technological development among all other medical associations," said Fleming.

JABFP Develops New Ethics Feature

The JABFP is developing a new "ethics" feature that will be edited by Tom Tomlinson, PhD, and colleagues in the Center for Ethics and Humanities in the Life Sciences at Michigan State University. Our goal is to provide a regular forum in which to discuss any of the myriad ethical issues, in both clinical and research settings, that are of special interest to family physicians and researchers. We invite Journal readers to submit case studies raising ethical questions for inclusion in this series. We would also like to develop a pool of readers with special interest or background in ethics who might be called upon to write commentaries. If you would like to offer a case, or put your name forward as a possible commentator on future cases, please contact Dr. Tomlinson via e-mail at tomlins4@msu.edu, or by telephone at (517) 355-1634.

THE ABFP'S NEW WEB PORTAL PROMISES UNPARALLELED ACCESS FOR FAMILY PHYSICIANS

January 2004 begins an exciting new era of communication delivery by the ABFP to all of its Diplomates via the Internet. Gone are the days when Diplomates have to wait for answers to questions regarding any aspect of certification/recertification status, examination dates, sites and scores, CME progress, etc. A secure, user-friendly Web site has been designed to help Diplomates manage all facets of their relationship with ABFP more efficiently.

The new ABFP Web portal, <http://www.abfp.org>, will give all Diplomates immediate and unparalleled access to their personal portfolio, which will contain vital information regarding their certification/recertification status. This information can be easily downloaded to provide necessary documentation for credentialing purposes. This new Web portal will also be the entry point used by Diplomates to participate in the Maintenance of Certification Program for Family Physicians (MC-FP) and for navigating and managing their progress in this process. Each Diplomate will have secure access to his or her unique personal portfolio by entering an ID and a password. IDs and passwords were mailed to all Diplomates in July 2003. A Diplomate who has misplaced his or her ID and/or password, should call the ABFP's Help Desk at (877) 223-7437.

The Web site will be divided into 2 sections. The first will contain general information that will be available to both Diplomates and the general public. This information will include an overview of the ABFP certification, recertification, and MC-FP requirements and processes, mechanisms for physician verification by insurance providers, third party payers, hospitals, etc,
